Green agenda mooted for all parties

City-based NGO wants it in manifestos

VENKAT PARSAD

New Delhi: Hyderabad-based environmental NGO Council for Green Revolution, which is working for environmental protection, has presented an eight-point green agenda to all major parties for inclusion in their election manifestoes.

It wants setting up of an environment protection authority; phasing out of nuclear reactors in five years; yearly white paper on environment in Parliament; autonomous river management boards; trusteeship council to manage common properties; environmental education and sensitization of people; a system to factor in environmental depletion in growth rate and rooftop production of solar energy.

Speaking to the media here on Friday, environmental activist K Purushottam Reddy, former AP Information Commissioner R Dileep Reddy and Supreme Court counsel M C Mehta appealed to parties to incorporate the agenda in their manifestoes.

Dileep Reddy said it was a two-way strategy adopted by them—try to persuade parties to include the agenda in manifestoes and act as a watchdog to ensure its implementation after elections.

Mehta, who fought several environmental cases in the apex court, argued for another green revolution. He said with rivers and air getting polluted and climate change affecting lives of millions, cancer cases were rising by leaps and bounds. Right to breathe clear air, to clean drinking water and proper food were basic requirements.

He called for setting up of environment courts.

Purushottam Reddy, describing environment as a life-and-death issue for millions, said it was high time parties took serious note of it. He recalled that the UN Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) were framed in 2000, setting ambitious targets to nations to realize the goals by 2015.

Reddy called upon all parties to take cognizance of the consensus at all global summits on sustainable development to fine tune millennium development goals and make them sustainable.
Greens set agenda for political parties

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

Hyderabad: Activists from the city on Tuesday demanded political parties to include environmental issues in their manifestos for the upcoming elections.

Listing close to two dozen demands, activists said that political parties have been ignoring green issues at state and national level. They cited instances of parties not fulfilling promises made, and said they would reach out to masses to dissuade them against voting for parties which do not make environmental part of their manifestos for the upcoming assembly and parliamentary elections.

"In AP, issues like solar power, encroachment of lakes and negligence of tanks in rural areas are some pressing issues that parties should address," said K Puroshotham Reddy of Council for Green Revolution.

The list of demands that were put out by the council for inclusion in party manifestos include constitution of Environment Protection Authority (EPA), solar energy for every home, phasing out nuclear reactors, increasing forest cover and constitution of national court for environmental justice on the lines of World Trade Organization. The activists noted that Telangana, when created, would be energy-deficient state. They said solar power should be tapped to meet energy needs in the new state. They also said that the government should create a separate department for lakes in urban areas and tanks in rural areas to prevent encroachment and to promote tank irrigation.

Reddy said that unless the parties include these issues in their manifestos and began working on them, India would have no progress to show when UN’s millennium development programme concludes next year.

Others who were present during the media interaction included retired IAS officer J Bapu Reddy, R Diljeep Reddy and K Leela Reddy.

On a mission to plant 1mn trees

Environmentalist Leela Laxma Reddy’s work aims to turn 100 villages into ‘green hubs’. And this is how she plans to do it

SULOGNA MEHTA
Growing up amidst lush greenery in a little village in Nalgonda had a deep impact on Leela Laxma Reddy. She learnt to love nature, found companionship among the trees and continued this passion into adulthood when she got actively involved in green campaigns. President of Council for Green Revolution (CGR), Reddy has taken up many initiatives in the areas of environment and sustainable development involving lakhs of school children.

“I want to sow the seeds of love for environment in the minds of children, so that they grow up to be responsible citizens,” she says.

CGR conducts training and motivational programmes for school children across hundreds of schools in AP. Each child is given three fruit-bearing and two shade giving saplings for planting in their homes. Follow-ups are done every few months to check if the trees have survived and medals are awarded to those with the best efforts.

“Awareness about environment and greenery is extremely low among people and they aren’t practically involved despite reading about global warming,” says Reddy adding, “Though the government isn’t providing financial support, it has been cooperative in helping us campaign and procure permissions.”

It’s with the collaboration of the government that two lakh children have been roped in at Medak district to plant 1 million trees. The youth is also being involved to make 100 villages go green in Mahbubnagar district. A helpline to protect green cover is also in the pipeline.

For all her achievements, Reddy acknowledges the support from her family including her husband Laxma Reddy and children Kiriti and Uttam.

“My daughter-in-law Swetamvari has been working by my side. Instead of fighting like usual mother and daughter-in-laws, we both have been fighting for the cause of environment,” she says adding, “I have also been guided and encouraged by Prof Purushottam Reddy, ex-IAS officer Babu Reddy and ex-RTI commissioner Dilip Reddy.”
